CLEVELAND MARKETS.

The butter market during the past week has been steady as regards both demand and price. The bulk of receipts, however, have shown a decided falling off in quality, and a really choice article for table use is scarcely to be found in the market. The increased demand created by of the liver, kidneys, skin, stomach, and the late fair which brought thousands to the city, most of the trade has been with local buyers The cool weather, which has now made an appearance, promises well for shippers, as a more uniform quality is expected during the coming week, which will undoubtedly lower present otations on choice, and decrease the propor satisfactory prices to the majority of consignors view of the cheese market, has entirely sub versal rule throughout the country. With the advance in prices which the furor created, came a determination to the minds of factorymen to profit by the occasion and bring dealers to their their cheese upon the shelves. Every advance prices, until, the excitement having subsided in having been withdrawn, dealers find themselve are in turn independent and resolved to let afairs run their own course, without seeking to press business, or reconcile the difference which exists between themselves and producers. For declined, and most orders have been billed at a same quality of cheese from the factories. We regard an advance, at no distant day, entirely bable; but it will be established more grad ually, upon a more legitimate basis, and more of the market, paying prices are merely nomielther secure concessions from factorymen, or chases at higher prices than at present pr there has been no marked decline in any of the will be found below.
